

Monique Medema was born in The Netherlands and raised in Germany. She joined the research group in November 2018 and is leading a research project on Healthy Food in hotels 'Food supply in hotels: hospitable and healthy for people and environment'. She studied Sociology at the University of Groningen (1996) with a specialization in socio-scientific research. Since 1998 she works for Stenden Hotel Management School as a Research Lecturer and thesis supervisor for bachelor and master students. A special interest lies in the social aspect of sustainability while being an expert in Humanitarian issues (Post doc in Humanitarian Assistance in 2004, RuG) and having entrepreneurial experience with Social Entrepreneurship, advising business on their CSR policies. Currently Monique is working on the concept of 'hostmanship, the art of making people feel welcome'. Monique has studied and worked in an international environment (Germany, Hungary, Aruba, South Africa, Nepal, Bali and Thailand).
